SONNY' SENDS $4 Use Your Head in Buying Headgear

"A dollar."

"What's the value of the lower-crowned one?"

"Dollar. All our hats are a dollar."

"Yes, I know the price. But what are they worth?" "Oh, this (pointing to the high crown) is a $3 value, and that (the low crown) is a $2 hat."

"Then they're not the same? They look the same quality

"Then you don't know anything about hats," observed this Chesterfield of salesmanship.

What the salesman himself knows he carefully conceals from four years in Newark and has learned his customers. For the $3 value straw, purchased by The Tribune this early in his life that battleships investigators, proves, on appraisal, to be worth nothing like that. are necessary. He has been busy on One appraiser characterizes it as "a mongrel." The braid ends in that theory lot some time, wild the front instead of in the rear, as it should. The edge is roughly finpersons. His four dollars-one for ished. The hat is poorly made and lacking in style. It looks as every year of his life-entitle him to if made for a jobber and resembles a large batch of hats which were in the market last year and were closed out at low prices. As Another contribution of yesterday an example of the "newest 1916 styles" it leaves too much to the

But it is on the stumbling block of Panamas that Marcus stubs resented the Boy Scouts of the his toe. At his Forty-second Street store, No. 63 West 42d St., where he does business under the title of the Bryant Men's Shop, The Tribune shoppers found a jocular but serviceable salesman. who proceeded to hook and haul in the fish attracted by the advertising bait in the newspapers:

"$5 and $6 Genuine Panamas, $2.75."

According to the salesman, who set forth a batch of imitations, there was no doubt of the genuineness of the straws. They were real Panamas, worth much more than the price asked. But he seemed surprised when the prospective purchaser wanted that bit of fiction specified on the sales slip. He couldn't understand it.

'Sales slip or no sale," insisted his customer.

That hurt his feelings. He ceased to be jocular and assumed a look of injured melancholy. Rather than lose the sale, however, he set down the legend "I Panama" on the slip, though not until he had consulted the manager and the cashier.

It is not, as has been indicated, a Panama hat. In fact, it is not a straw hat at all, but is the familiar Japanese paper confection. In view of a recent conviction and fine, Mr. Marcus seems to be within reach of the law.

In purchasing headgear, whether "Panama," "imported" or just plain hat, there are a few points worth bearing in mind. Sample stores, cut prices and special bargains usually mean more than ppears in the advertising, and that to the disadvantage of the purchaser. Any one but an expert who rises to this bait is more than likely to find himself "stuck" vith a paper hat, a cheap imitation, a stiff, gluey bandbox about as light and comfortable on the head as an inverted hod, or a soiled and worn relic of this year's "jobs"

After all, what do you buy a hat for? Your head, don't you? Very well; a suggestion: Why not use your head in buying your hat? If it's a good head, worthy of a good hat, it will take you to good store where they play no tricks on either the geography or
